Civil Society Development

PIN strives to develop an active and grassroots-based civil society, which is able to engage authorities and other stakeholders on the issues that matter most to local communities. To do so, PIN is scaling up well-proven mechanisms for participatory local development that involve civil society organisations and active citizens working together with institutions in order to develop good strategies for the social and economic development of their territories. PIN's approach is two-fold. Firstly, we aim to empower people and civil society organisations by providing the tools and knowledge required. Subsequently, PIN proactively supports dialogue among actors and provides grants to support social projects that are designed in a participatory manner - in particular, the ones developed by young people and municipalities to jointly solve community issues. With a 'learn-by-doing' approach, PIN also supports local institutions to increasingly finance local development themselves, fostering a future of self-reliance.

Social Protection and Inclusion

Based on our experience in the Czech Republic, PIN establishes coordination mechanisms between local NGOs and government at local and national levels, so that they can jointly improve the quality and outreach of social services in rural areas, as well as the employability of vulnerable people. Through grants, trainings and coaching, PIN provides opportunities for people to start businesses and establish social enterprises. PIN fights stigma towards vulnerable groups using innovative methodologies such as learning through documentary films in order to raise awareness and challenge harmful stereotypes among the population.

Agriculture and Rural Development

PIN aims to reduce poverty in rural areas. PIN supports relevant government, market and grassroots actors to develop and sustain services, procedures and policies which enable people in rural areas to:

- access affordable, quality services and products that they need to develop their livelihoods
- profitably market their production (primarily through value chain development).

PIN supports the formation of cooperatives of like-minded farmers, and gives them access to the information, knowledge, markets and services they need to develop their livelihoods. To do so, PIN works with all actors to connect them and build their capacity, both as individual units and together as a market system. In this context, PIN helped introduce the LEADER approach to Georgia (in Kazbegi municipality), which strengthens and empowers Local Action Groups to elaborate strategies for diversification and innovation of the rural economy and offers opportunities for young people to stay in rural areas.

Our work in Georgia

PIN strives for a world in which people are not restricted by an unfree society, poverty, lack of opportunities or discrimination. We believe our world can be a better place for people who are suffering from poverty, injustice or inequality. We also believe that people who are in need can play an active role in making global development more inclusive and sustainable.

In Georgia, empowering people is at the heart of all we do. PIN understands empowerment as a process by which people become more capable of claiming their rights and actively promoting change.

PIN's goal in Georgia is to reduce poverty and inequalities, particularly in rural areas. We work towards this goal by: 1) making the development process in Georgia more pro-poor and inclusive; 2) building the capacity of people, organisations and networks to advocate and implement changes and 3) protecting the poorest and most vulnerable households, which remain excluded from the development process. In the event of a disaster, PIN also has a role to play to save lives and protect the dignity of people affected by the disaster, as outlined in PIN's Emergency and Preparedness Plan.

Our Strengths

PIN invests in long-term strategic partnerships with Georgian CSOs, universities, private companies and public institutions with whom we share values and a vision to reduce poverty and inequalities in Georgia.

PIN strongly believes in gender equality. We commit to analysing gender dimensions, designing and implementing measures that address and transform gender roles and norms that are harmful and reproduce inequalities and discrimination.

We believe in the role of young people as agents of change in their communities and seek to build the capacity of youth in all our priority sectors.
